

A way to save money - and it is free!

Hello lino,

Your vet says "We can do the dental work next week and should be able to give you a more precise quote once we have Sally (put your friend's name here) asleep and we know the extent of the problems with the teeth".

Gulp! You're told it is at least $800 but there may be other surprises. It is FAR worse than dropping your car off for an unknown problem. It is your furchild they are talking about, not a car you can just sell!

When I started practice (and yes I am dating myself), having dental work for dogs was $99 and cats $69. That included the extractions. Now we are talking thousands.

What can we do about it?

If there is dental disease, you can't do much. It needs attention (though there are ways to soften the financial blow).

But you can take control. You can do is move into a preventive program. You can save money. I can tell you how.

Don't miss out on our upcoming free webinar where you can learn how to potentially reduce your pet's dental care expenses – maybe even to zero!

Event Details:

- Title: Lowering (maybe to zero!) Your Pet's Dental Costs!
